Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Anti-Slavery Reform: Its Principle and Method When Milton was engaged in writing his Second Defence of the People of England, he had wholly lost the sight of one eye, and the sight of the remaining eye was partially affected. He was advised by his physician, that, if he persevered and completed his task, he would become totally and hopelessly blind. And what did that old hero in the cause of civil and religious liberty do? Did he hesitate or falter at the prospect? No: he steered right onward, nor bated jot of heart or hope, and finished the work which was set before him, - that noble task with which all Europe rang from side to side. And, when the evil days of the Restoration found him eyeless, among enemies, but triumphant in soul, what supported him in his terrible affliction? Let his own words, taken from his magnificent sonnet to Cyriack Skinner, answer: - What supports me, dost thou ask? - The conscience, friend, to have lost them overplied In liberty s defence. Blind, among enemies, Milton enjoyed that unspeakable consolation, - the reflection, that, for the cause of liberty, he had been willing to endure a trial worse than chains, Dungeon, or beggary, or decrepit age.
