Seldon counsels stockmarket investors to keep the mind clear and balanced so as to avoid acting hastily on sensational information. He advises against trading so heavily as to cause anxiety. Permitting oneself to be influenced by market position is also taboo. Seldon holds that too many cooks spoil the broth, therefore investors should act either solely on their own judgment, or absolutely and entirely on the judgment of another regardless of the investors opinion. Seldon advises investors not to follow the market beyond a reasonable climax, no matter how large the possible profits potentially lost by inaction may be. Though a hundred years have passed since Seldon first penned this book, human DNA has not changed. Fear greed, hope and despair continue to be key elements in everything that we do including stock market investing. There are so many quotable phrases in this book. Foundational to everything is this one: Probably no better general rule can be laid down than the brief one, Stick to common...
