To the left of this magnificent reservoir, the plain is bordered by small hills strewed with an innumerable quantity of blocks of lava. Evidently these blocks of lava have not come here by themselves, and are, like those of Tarichea, vestiges of an ancient town. The only difference is that they are larger than those Of Tarichee, and I am inclined to believe that this increased dimension denotes a higher antiquity. It seems to me impossible to question the identity of the spring enclosed within the stone reservoir, which I have just described, and now called the Ayn-el-Medaouarah, (the circular fountain), with the spring mentioned by Josephus, and which he denominates the fountain of Capernaum. This last watered and fertilised the plain of Gennesar; the Ayn-el-Medaouarah still waters and fertilises this same plain of Gennesar, now called El-Rhoueyr; for the water running from the reservoir forms a large rivulet, which might easily be drained into canals of irrigation. The fountain of Josephus produced shoals of small fishes; the circular fountain still contains the progeny of the same fishes mentioned by Josephus; consequently we are on the territory of Capernaum, when we arrive at the Ayn-el-Medaouarah. The ruins still recognisable, the basaltic rocks of which are scattered over the This reservoir is exactly similar to those...
